“Blessing”

What Does It Mean To Be a People of Blessing?

These days, more than ever, it seems imperative that we are mindful of tending to our spirits. Reminding ourselves, over and over, of goodness and wonder, of that which gives us hope, or even just reminds of the breathtaking beauty (of all sorts) all around us. One way of doing this is noticing the blessings in our lives.

For me, anyway, spring time is an easy source for blessings. One of my favorite things in the world is the scent of the lily of the valley. These are delicate short flowers that grow from the ground, so during their short blooming season, I am wont to be on the ground, sticking my head in a little patch in order to most fully breathe in the delicate aroma. My wife is partial to lilacs, which tend to be much higher up and thus more easily enjoyed deeply. These flowers bloom around the same time, so both of us are known to walk around that particular time of year, sighing with happiness. Our son, on the other hand, enjoys the fluffy dandelions, the ones ready to be dispersed with the right blowing technique. There is something particularly satisfying and joyful at watching that fluff float through the air.

I am sure you have your own seasonal list for this time of year. Bare feet on grass. A quiet rainstorm. Planting seeds with anticipation. Offerings at the farmer's market. Sitting outside--to eat or read or talk or just be. Those are a few that come to mind. And those are just the ones that I thought of myself as I was sitting here. I bet together we could come up with a much longer list. One that has things that didn't even occur to me. And maybe mine didn't occur to you.

Which brings me to the blessing of being a people of blessing. The truth is, when it comes to blessing, like with so many other things, we are better together. Once upon a time, I only appreciated the trees of springtime--the ones full of leaves and blossoms. It wasn't until I had a long conversation with someone about trees in winter that I fully became to appreciate them. And now, when there's not a leaf or a blossom to be seen, I look up and see the beauty of the bare branches against the winter sky. I have come to treasure them just as much. A blessing in winter. My son, of course, has helped me to realize new blessings or see old ones with new eyes, as well.

There's a great quote about a friend being someone who sings your song back to you when you have forgotten it. A friend might also be someone who remembers to help you notice blessings, or perhaps shares their own perspectives on blessings when you have forgotten to notice. There are times, of course, we just need to be sad together. That in itself is a blessing. And sometimes we need help in being reminded of the many blessings that are within us and all around us.

Our Spiritual Exercises

Option A: Secret Blessings

Wayne Muller, in his book Sabbath, encourages a practice he calls secret blessing. He writes, "Bless strangers quietly, secretly. Offer it to people you notice on the street, in the market, on the bus. [Silently say to yourself] "May you be happy. May you be at peace." Feel the blessing move through your body as you offer it. Notice how you both receive some benefit from the blessing."

At first blush it's hard to imagine how a secret blessing can produce much good. How can a person receive something they aren't aware you're giving them? But, of course, this practice is more about what happens to us than what happens to them. It alters our attention, making us scan and become more aware of our surroundings. It changes our attitude toward others. Just image going through your day looking for excuses to wish people well or think the best of them rather than looking for threats and assuming ill intent. And it connects us to others, helping us acknowledge common struggles and hungers.

But how exactly might it change you? That is what this exercise is all about.

Do it for a day or maybe two. Be disciplined about it and set a target for yourself like, "I will secretly offer 10 blessings to 10 different people throughout the day." Don't be afraid to keep it simple. A blessing is as straightforward as completing the sentence: "I wish _____ for you."

At the end of the day meditate on or write about how offering those blessings and seeking out people to bless altered your day. How did blessing others bless you?

Come to your group ready to share a few stories about who you blessed, how and why.

Option B: A Blessing List

One of the most famous Blessing Lists comes from The Sound of Music and the song, My Favorite Things. The point of the song is that ordinary blessings save us. "We don't feel so sad" the song says. We also don't feel so isolated, anxious or disconnected from life. As we notice the ordinary blessings around us, we experience life as a generous friend not a threatening foe. Or to use theological language, ordinary blessings communicate to us that in some mysterious way we are the beloved of the spirit at the heart of life. When we focus on our favorite things, it can feel like these blessings were created just for us.

So take a week and connect to your belovedness by making a list of "your favorite things." Add at least 2-3 each day.

And yes, make it a literal list. To make it easy on you, we've put together a Blessing List form for you to download and print out: <https://docs.google.com/document/d/1fPKcGMWmERek9WK7BeZ-97gnxVCbt0OXo2OE5yFIVCg/edit?usp=sharing>

Put the list in a place you will see it each day: by your bed, on your desk, on the fridge. It's important to watch it fill up so you can more easily see connections and themes. Don't worry about being profound. Think of the Sound of Music song: it was full of simple things. Similarly, the point of this exercise is to identify YOUR favorite simple things: french press coffee rather than automatic drip; the way the cat curls up on your lap in the evening when you are watching TV; the way your son unconsciously sticks his tongue out when he's concentrating; the sound of your daughter's laugh; the Saturday morning reruns of car-talk on NPR.

Come to your group ready to share the list, if you are comfortable. Also be ready to share how noticing these blessings blessed you.

Option C: Bless Yourself

In its simplest form, a blessing is a wish that some form of strength or goodness comes into the life of another. As Rabbi Lawrence Kushner puts it, "Offering a blessing is like a coach whispering to an athlete before a competition, "You can do it!" More than encouragement, the words of blessing literally bring forth and make real an otherwise unrealizable force."

How that force is brought forth can be debated, but at least it's clear that focusing one's attention on something makes it more likely it will manifest in our lives.

So why not do some manifesting of your own? Why not bless yourself? Start by asking, What do I wish for in my life right now? More courage? Patience? Awareness of beauty? Whatever it is, make it your blessing for yourself this month. Think of it as saying to yourself, "May _____ be mine as I journey through this month."

Once you've figured out your self-blessing, add a concrete dimension to the exercise by finding an object that symbolizes your blessing and put it in a place where you will see it every day. For instance if you wish for patience to bless you this month, find an old wrist watch and sit it on the table next to your bed. If it's the courage to forgive others, maybe find a rock that symbolizes the grudge you're holding. If it's memory you hope to be blessed by, find a picture of the dead loved one you want to hold tighter to and make room for it on your desk. Let your chosen physical object incarnate your blessing. Let it, in a sense, bless you every time you look at it.

Come to your group with your object, if you are comfortable. Also be ready to share how blessing yourself this way made Kushner's "otherwise unrealizable force" emerge.

Option D: Write a Blessing

Former priest and poet John O'Donohue was a master at writing blessings for everyday challenges and transitions. In his beloved book, To Bless the Space Between Us: A Book of Blessings, he wrote blessings for everything from retirement and divorce to buying a new home or finding a new job. He also wrote blessings for people, from new parents and business leaders to farmers and nurses. He saw blessings as companions for our journeys. A way of making one's path more clear and reminding one that others have walked these ways before.

So what journey are you in the midst of right now? Or what journey is someone you care about in the midst of? This exercise invites you to offer yourself or another person a companion for that journey by trying your hand at writing a blessing.

O'Donohue's book is easily available at libraries or online. We encourage you to get it and use it to support you on your way.

Come to your group ready to share the blessing you wrote, if you are comfortable. Also share the story of why you picked the topic you did and if you gave it to another person to bless them on their way.

Option E: Bless the Teachers

It's the end of the school year. For many of us, teachers have offered us a huge blessing by guiding and caring for our children. And yet, teachers rarely get thanked for the blessings they give. So bless these teachers back. Work with your kids to find your own way of saying thanks. It might be a letter or a more tangible symbolic gift. Whatever it is, make sure it conveys the many ways they have left a mark and offered a blessing that matters more than they know.

Here's a video to inspire and motivate you:

Your Question

As always, don't treat these questions like "homework" or a list that needs to be covered in its entirety. Instead, simply pick the single question that speaks to you most and let it lead you where you need to go. The goal is to figure out what being a part of a people of blessing means for you and your daily living. So, which question is calling to you? Which one contains "your work"? Where is that question trying to lead you?

1. Is it time to embrace yourself as a blessing once again? We all forget sometimes. We all let others' definitions of worth determine how we feel about our own. The work of seeing ourselves as a blessing is ongoing. How do you need to re-claim or re-name your blessing to the world?
2. What is your very favorite thing to do? When was the last time you did it? Why again aren't you doing it all the time? Or at least much more often?
3. Some say a blessing is anything that helps us remember who we really are. We most often lose ourselves in work or relationships that ask us to be something we're not. Is it time to bless yourself and find yourself by saying goodbye to a job or a relationship that doesn't bless and see you?
4. Has age helped or hurt? At what age were you best at noticing the blessings around you? Have you gotten better as time has gone on? Or worse? What would improve your gaze?
5. Did your words bless or curse others this past week? A Soul Matters facilitator writes, "My Mom often told us to consider our words before offering an opinion. Her mantra was: "Are your words kind and helpful? If both adjectives do not apply, keep the thought to yourself!" What words have fallen from your lips lately that you need to go back and turn into a blessing?
6. Is it time to bless yourself with the foolishness of believing you can do what others say can't be done?
7. Have you thanked all of your "fathers" for their blessings? Many of us have more than one father figure in our lives. When was the last time you told them thanks for their gifts? And let them know you carry them and their influence with you still?
8. In the midst of all the praises for ordinary blessings, is a tiny voice inside you whispering "more!?" Maybe it's ok to ignore a few everyday blessings for a while so you can make that "big blessing" real.

9. Sometimes there aren't blessings hidden in our pain. Sometimes it's not you overlooking the blessings; they simply aren't there. Often we just need space to acknowledge the emptiness, rather than have people try to minimize it, make it go away or convince us we should find a silver lining. Is that the blessing you really need? The blessing of space to do nothing but mourn the loss and feel the pain? What will it take for you to get it?

10. Some blessings are always there; others are fleeting and eventually leave us. Which of your current blessings' time clock is farther along than you wish? What blessing needs noticed before it says goodbye?

11. Are you more often anxious about scarcity than you are stunned by all the undeserved blessings?

12. What was your biggest "unexpected blessing moment"? When did a blessing surprise and sustain you in the midst of pain? What gift or lesson from that story do you need to most remember today?

13. What if you told yourself that this was the best and most blessed part of your life? What might look or feel differently to you?

14. What's your question? Your question may not be listed above. As always, if the above questions don't include what life is asking from you, spend the month listening to your days to hear it.

Companion Pieces

Recommended Resources for Personal Exploration & Reflection

The below recommended resources are not "required reading." We will not analyze these pieces at our small group meeting. Instead they are here to companion you on your personal journey this month, get your thinking started, and open you to new ways of thinking about what it means to be part of a people of blessing.

Word Roots

Blessing has a long history of meanings and roots. The Old English blēdsian based on blōd 'blood' (originally to 'mark or consecrate with blood') was used to translate the Latin benedicere 'to praise or worship.' The meaning shifted in late Old English toward 'pronounce or make happy, prosperous, or fortunate.' In the Semitic language of Aramaic, the phrase translated as 'Blessed' in the Beatitudes was actually tubwayhun which refers to being ripe, mature; having reached a stage of the fullness of the person I am meant to be.

Wise Words

So what, then, does it mean to offer a blessing, to be a blessing? To bless something or someone is to invoke its wholeness, to help remind the person or thing you are blessing of its essence, its sacredness, its beauty, and to help remind yourself of that, too. Blessing does not fix anything. It is not a cure... It does not instill health or well-being or strength. Instead, it reminds us that those things are already there, within us.

Rev. Elea Kemler

There is a reality in blessing... It doesn't enhance sacredness, but it acknowledges it.

Marilynne Robinson, from Gilead

To bless is to put a bit of yourself into something.

Macrina Wiederkehr and Joyce Rupp

To give someone a blessing is the most significant affirmation we can offer. It is more than a word of praise or appreciation; it is more than pointing out someone's talents or good deeds; it is more than putting someone in the light. To give a blessing is to affirm, to say "yes" to a person's Belovedness.

Henri J. M. Nouwen

A blessing is not something that one person gives another. A blessing is a moment of meeting, a certain kind of relationship in which both people involved remember and acknowledge their true nature and worth and strengthen what is whole in one another. By making a place for wholeness within our relationships, we offer others the opportunity to be whole without shame and become a place of refuge from everything in them and around them that is not genuine. We enable people to remember who they are.

Rachel Naomi Remen, My Grandfather's Blessings

The one who offers a blessing is like a coach whispering to an athlete before a competition, "You can do it!" More than encouragement, positive spin, or sincere wish, the words of blessing literally bring forth and make real an otherwise unrealizable force. In this way, blessing is not supplication but symbiosis. God needs us to summon blessings, just as we could not live without them.

Lawrence Kushner

Where does it come from, this strange unquenchable human urge for 'more' that is both our blessing and our curse? It has caused us to lift our eyes to the heavens and thread together pieces of the universe until we can glimpse a shadow of the divine creation. Yet to gain this knowledge, we have sometimes lost the mystery of a cloud, the beauty of a garden, the joy of a single step. We must learn to value the small as well as the great... Do we really need much more than this? To honor the dawn. To visit a garden. To talk to a friend. To contemplate a cloud. To cherish a meal. To bow our heads before the mystery of the day. Are these not enough?

Kent Neburn

We bless the life around us far more than we realize... the unexpected phone call, the brief touch, the willingness to listen generously, the warm smile or wink of recognition. Big messages come in small packages. All it may take to restore someone's trust in life may be returning a lost earring or a dropped glove. A woman once told me that she did not feel the need to reach out to those around her because she prayed every day... But a prayer is about our relationship to God; a blessing is about our relationship to the spark of God in one another. God may not need our attention as badly as the person next to us on the bus or behind us on line in the supermarket.

Rachel Naomi Remen, My Grandfather's Blessings

It's hardest to love the ordinary things, she said, but you get lots of opportunities to practice.

Something Wild and Unbroken (Blessed by surprising beauty)

Carrie Newcomer

"Riding my bike down a narrow country road...

A graceful young doe

Was bounding in beautiful unhurried leaps...

Then with a burst of speed

She dashed in front of me

And disappeared into the woods

Leaving me breathless

With a feeling of visitation...

Since that moment,

The world has felt less weary..."

It could happen any time, tornado, earthquake, Armageddon. It could happen.

Or sunshine, love, salvation.

It could, you know. That's why we wake and look out — no guarantees in this life.

But some bonuses, like morning,
like right now, like noon,
like evening.

Yes!

-William Stafford

Blessed be the longing that brought you here
And quickens your soul with wonder.

May you have the courage to listen to the voice of desire that disturbs you when you have settled for something safe.

John O'Donohue

A Franciscan Benediction

May God bless us with discomfort

At easy answers, half-truths, and superficial relationships

So that we may live from deep within our hearts.

May God bless us with anger

At injustice, oppression, and exploitation of God's creations

So that we may work for justice, freedom, and peace.

May God bless us with tears

To shed for those who suffer pain, rejection, hunger, and war,

So that we may reach out our hands to comfort them and

To turn their pain into joy.

And may God bless us with just enough foolishness
To believe that we can make a difference in the world,

So that we can do what others claim cannot be done:

To bring justice and kindness to all our children and all our neighbors who are poor.

Thank you, faithful things!

Mark Strand

Thank you, faithful things!

Thank you, world!

To know that the city is still there,

that the woods are still there,

and the houses, and the hum of traffic and the slow cows grazing in the field;

that the earth continues to turn and time hasn't stopped,

that we come back whole

to suck the sweet marrow of day,

thank you, bright morning,

thank you, thank you!
